To Whom it May Concern:

Re: JRA & Associates

Dear Sir or Madam:

I can recommend, without reservation, the mechanical firm of JRA & Associates.

I have found them to be a company that is honest, forthright and fair. They give clear concise scopes of work, when bidding a project, and then follow through with exactly what they promised they would do. One would think that doing what one promised is not worth noting, but of late I have found that many firms try and get around commitments made. This is definitely not the case with JRA.

When changes in scope do occur, their pricing is fair, reasonable and fully documented. On a recent project I found this kind of response to be a tremendous help in negotiating changes with the Owner.

If you contract with JRA on a project, they will not disappoint. They will follow through with what they say and provide a professional installation, for the price quoted and in the timeframe promised.

If I were operating a mechanical contracting business, I would do so in the fashion that Joy Anderson runs her organization.

If you have any questions or require additional information, do not hesitate to contact us.

Sincerely,

CORNING CONSTRUCTION CORPORATION
